

The Prosthetic

Every day, I take a part of him—his leg—and polish it in wax so when I fit it in, it has my handprints carefully faded by cloth, and that sweet clean. The memory of my fingers on the memory of his leg, just like any other love story.

