New Collaboration Released: September 2010

“Extirpation”

Poet Keith Ekiss is a former Wallace Stegner Fellow in poetry at Stanford University and the author of Pima Road Notebook (New Issues Poetry & Prose, 2010).

Artist Douglas Culhane works in sculpture and drawing. He has exhibited in New York and New England. See more of his work at www.douglasculhane.com. “Extirpation” is Culhane’s fifth Broadsided collaboration.

FROM THE COLLABORATORS’ Q&A:

Bsided: Anything else?

Douglas Culhane: This was an especially interesting collaboration for me. The theme and imagery of Keith’s poem drew me in, as I lived with it I realized that it was also built on words with social and political weight.... I feel like my role in the collaboration was to amplify the imagery -- what was alluded to, but absent. Given the events in the Gulf this summer, this project speaks to deep and urgent concerns for all of us.

I plan on using Broadsided in the classroom again this term, where students will work in groups to think about where to share Broadsided and why. I've found it is a great way to open a discussion about why literature is important in our daily lives. And the students are really into it.

Writing Contest: The Haiku Year-in-Review!

In September, we’ll be calling for your writing in an innovative new project that combines art, poetry, and the traditional Carrier’s Address.

About Broadsided

At the beginning of every month, a new visual/literary collaboration is posted on www.broadsidedpress.org.

Writing is chosen through open submissions. Artists allied with Broadsided “dibs” what resonates for them and respond visually.

The resulting letter-sized pdf is designed to be downloaded and printed by anyone with a computer and printer.

“Vectors” around the globe print and post Broadsided locally. We have vectors in almost every US state, Finland, Japan, and elsewhere.

Our goal is to create something both gorgeous and cheap. We want to put words and art on the streets.
